This is the most common sexual position. It's also the least difficult. Just fall on top of each other, and there you have it! Nobody knows why it is called "missionary," although I once dated a girl who used to be a real missionary, and she didn't mind this position. No sir, she didn't mind it all! (Fun Fact: Armadillos also have sex in this position.)

An intense debate rages over who invented this position. The canines still receive most of the credit (and collect royalties), but there has been a strong push from the rhino lobby in Congress to change the official name. It's a good position if you don't want your partner to see your bitter tears of shame.

Think people who have sex lying down are lazy? You're damn right! Some of us don't have the time to lie down like some lazy loafer—we've got jobs, dammit!

This position is the favorite among important people for whom time is money. President John Kennedy used this position almost exclusively, often while taking phone calls, wearing only his tie and a belt.

This very difficult move requires you to get so hot and worked up that you and your partner literally burst into flames. Quickly form a loop and make sure the dog you use is a trained professional.

I'll admit, this one is really more of a novelty move. If it's a rainy day, and you're bored, and the two of you are stuck inside . . . give it a whirl.

Like a grisly auto accident, you and your partner will be unable to take your eyes off each other. This move is even better when performed on the side of a highway.

Balance is key in this position, as well as good, strong core muscles. This acrobatic move was adapted from a stunning set piece I saw in Cirque du Soleil.

Here's another one I saw performed at the circus, this time by an Indian swami. To execute it correctly requires tremendous concentration, as well as a ten-foot-long prehensile penis. It hurts really bad, unless you're the one descending, in which case it just feels wierd.

Originally one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, this move requires that you build baked-brick walls whose circuit is 385 stadia. The thickness of the walls should be 32 feet, and their uppermost tiers should rise to 60 cubits. Onto these tiers, place enough topsoil so that even the largest trees can take root. Raise water to the different tiers through a series of ingeniously made Archimedes screws, which deliver copious amounts of water but are hidden from sight. Place your creation on the banks of the Euphrates to get the full effect. Oh, and then have sex there.
